Welcome to REP XII and MAD-AAG conference

Welcome to the 12th conference of Race, Ethnicity, and Place (REP) in conjunction with the Middle Atlantic Division of the American Association of Geographers (MADAAG)! The theme of the conference is Mapping and Empowerment. Held at the George Washington University in the Foggy Bottom neighborhood of Washington, D.C., the conference offers papers and poster presentations, panel discussions and keynotes by seasoned and early career scholars as well as practitioners from a diversity of disciplinary perspectives.

If this is the first time you are attending REP, thank you for joining our community of scholars and practitioners. If you are a returning participant, thank you for coming back. Whether you are attending for the first or the twelfth time, we hope you will enjoy the two days of paper, panel, and poster sessions by scholars, professionals, and students. Each time slot includes four concurrent sessions of papers and panels during the two days. “Featured Panels” reflect the conference theme of mapping and empowerment, as well as related themes of social justice, diversity, and inclusion in the work we do in the academy. We are especially happy to welcome the early career scholars and their mentors to this year’s NSF-supported preconference Critical Cartography and Pedagogy Workshop on October 11, 2023.

Please join us for the opening reception on the evening of Wednesday October 11 and the Friday October 13 plenary at which Dayna Mathew, the Dean of GW’s Law School and Mark Hugo Lopez, the Director of Race and Ethnicity Research at the Pew Research Center will speak. This will be followed by a reception in the City View Room.

We hope you have an opportunity to explore parts of Foggy Bottom and the National Mall in the evenings and on Saturday. You will find in the program, and on the REP website, information on the conference neighborhood, as well as suggestions for restaurants and cultural institutions that you may wish to visit.

We owe a great deal of thanks to the many universities, professional organizations, individual sponsors, and donors who have made attendance of so many of you at the conference possible. The Dean of the Columbian College at George Washington University, Texas State University, and Kent State University have provided important startup funding for us. Indeed, this year’s conference owes its success to all the attendees and to its diverse sponsors, the names of whom are found on the final page of this program. The National Science Foundation has generously supported the workshop, and the American Association of Geographers has provided support for student travel.

We are glad you are here and look forward to meeting as many of you as possible. Have a great experience!

Conference Guidelines

We have worked hard to build a program that accommodates everyone who wished to present as well as the panels and events that will provide a significant experience for attendees and support our themes and principles. To enable everyone to make the most of the experience, we ask that you abide by the direction of paper and program session chairs—staying within the time allotted for a presentation and engaging in constructive discussion. Most presentations should not exceed 15 minutes to allow for robust discussion. Sessions are 100 minutes long, and chairs have discretion with respect to asking presenters to conclude or in managing questions and discussion, in order that every presenter have equal time.

Schedule Overview

The Foggy Bottom Neighborhood In Washington, D.C.

The Foggy Bottom neighborhood is located on the ancestral lands of the Anacostan and Piscataway peoples. Once a thriving community, the indigenous population here was decimated by new diseases and war following the arrival of Europeans. Some of the remaining peoples were forcibly removed and even sold into slavery in the Caribbean Islands. Foggy Bottom was settled by Europeans (mostly German, and later, Irish immigrants) after 1765, when Jacob Funk, a developer of Swiss-German ancestry bought land here and subdivided it for sale to settlers. Known then as Hamburg, it was also colloquially called Funkstown after Jacob Funk. One of the oldest churches in the city (Concordia German Evangelical Church, renamed the United Church or Die Vereinigte Kirche, was built here in 1833 on land donated by Jacob Funk. The church still exists and conducts traditional worship services in German twice a month, a weekly German language meet-up, and provides a space for German speakers in the city to connect with each other.

By the 1800s small industries such as glass works, breweries and the city gas works were located here. According to local legend, the name “Foggy Bottom” is a nod to the smoke given off by these industries and the mist rolling in from the Potomac River. After the mid-1800s, the population of the area grew and included blacks as well as whites, many of whom worked in local industries.

Foggy Bottom became the site of the main campus of the George Washington University in 1912. The university currently has a footprint of some 20 city blocks spread over 42 acres, with academic and office buildings, residence halls, libraries, theaters, the GW Hospital and medical services, gyms and eating places. The historic district of the neighborhood has row houses built in the 1800s. An alley community called Snow’s Court with 2-story narrow brick homes was occupied by Irish laborers before the Civil War. After the end of the war, freed African Americans flocked to the city and lived in low-cost alley dwellings such as Snow’s Court. The Watergate Complex which has apartments, offices, retail stores and a hotel is located in the neighborhood. In 1972, the Democratic National Committee’s headquarters located in the Watergate was broken into by burglars with associations to President Nixon’s reelection committee. This political scandal eventually led to the resignation of President Richard M. Nixon.

The neighborhood is also home to important national and multinational organizations and agencies. Many federal government offices (including the State Department), the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, the American Red Cross’ National Headquarters, the Pan American Health Organization, the Organization of American States and the Mexican and Spanish embassies are located here. Another notable amenity is the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts which was built on the site of a former brewery and opened in 1971. It offers different genres of performance art including music, dance and theater. There are free performances in the Grand Foyer Wednesdays through Saturdays at 6 p.m.

The Foggy Bottom- GWU metro station opened in 1977, connecting the neighborhood with other parts of the city and neighboring areas of Virginia and Maryland. One can take the metro rail from Foggy Bottom-GWU metro station to Dulles International Airport and Reagan National Airport. Today, the bustling neighborhood has residential, office and academic buildings, a hospital, entertainment, restaurants, banks, and stores that draw a mix of people for work and play.

Places to Visit during REP XII

The National Museum of African American History and Culture is located at 1400 Constitution Avenue, NW on the National Mall. Timed passes are required and are available online three months in advance. On weekdays, visitors can enter the museum without passes beginning at 10 a.m. Daily 10 AM to 5:30 PM. Last entry is at 4:00 PM.

The Frederick Douglass National Historic Site, located at Cedar Hill in Anacostia at 1411 W St SE. You can tour the 21-room mansion with a park ranger, while the site offers breathtaking views of the city. Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays 9:00 AM to 5:00 PM. Reservations are strongly encouraged.

The National Museum of the American Indian is located at 4th Street and Independence Avenue, SW on the National Mall. Built through collaborations with Native Peoples the museum offers a more informed understanding of many of the Native Peoples of the Americas. Daily 10 AM to 5:30 PM

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial sits on a 4-acre site on the tidal basin and features a 30-foot statue of Dr. King and quotes from his speeches, sermons, and writings.

The Mary McLeod Bethune Council House is located at 1318 Vermont Avenue NW. It was the home of Mary McLeod Bethune, a civil rights champion, leader of women, presidential adviser, and renowned educator. The building served as the first headquarters of the National Council of Negro Women (NCNW), which developed programs and strategies that advanced the interests of African American women. Ranger-led tours of the house begin at 9:45 AM and continue until 4 PM on Thursdays and Fridays. Access the virtual tour here: https://www.nps.gov/mamc/learn/photosmultimedia/virtual-tour.htm/index.htm

Visit the Lincoln Memorial where Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his “I Have a Dream” speech after his March on Washington in 1963. It was on a stage built over the steps of the Lincoln Memorial that African American opera singer Marian Anderson performed in 1939 after the Daughters of the American Revolution had her barred from singing in Washington D.C.'s Constitution Hall because she was Black.

The block of 16th Street NW north of the White House has large yellow letters permanently painted on a pedestrian section of the road marking it as Black Lives Matter Plaza. It is the site of protests and demonstrations for social justice annd and equality.

The colonial gaze continues to drive cartographic representations of the Global South. This panel builds on experiences from a Fall 2020 course titled, Cartographies of the Global South, wherein participants were encouraged to think critically about maps as political tools and to develop a mapping praxis that is not limited by the predominant GIS and cartographic canon. In this panel we will reflect on how engaging with political movements and commitments of the Global South, especially self-determination of subjugated people and places, can intervene on pedagogy and practice in cartography.

Social inequalities across institutions and within everyday spaces of higher education often prevent people of color and other underrepresented groups from accessing resources and opportunities. The discipline of Geography is no exception with considerable gaps in representation of diverse groups among faculty, students, and scholarship as a whole. According to the American Association of Geographers (AAG), only 36 percent of the degrees conferred in 2021 went to historically excluded populations, while faculty, especially at advanced levels, are disproportionately white males.

This panel addresses the gaps in representation of people of color, women, and other marginalized communities in geography through analyses of national data and a recent study by the Status of Women in Geography (SWG) on work-life balance, departmental climate, and leadership in the discipline. The multi-scalar analysis focuses on institutional data and individual experiences to better understand bias, discrimination, and hostile climates that confront underrepresented populations. The panelists will also present strategies for closing these gaps in support of diverse groups in Geography.

Investing where the needs are greatest: Operationalizing investing with the people and places where the needs are greatest

Nicole D. Franklin
Pro-Equity Anti-Racism Institute

Panelists:
Nicole D. Franklin, Pro-Equity Anti-Racism Institute
Frank Romo, RomoGIS
Clinton Johnson, NorthStar of GIS

This panel discussion delves into the pivotal theme of racial equity within impactful investing, illuminating the pragmatic application of investment strategies tailored to address the urgent needs of unserved and underserved regions and communities. Our discussion delves deeply into a critical intersection: the convergence of impactful investing and racial equity. With a focus on operationalizing investment strategies to address the urgent needs of people and places, the panel will explore the nuanced dynamics between need-based and race-based decision-making approaches. By directing financial resources strategically, the discussion aims to dissect how these distinct paradigms can be leveraged to effect transformative, sustainable positive outcomes, particularly in contexts marked by racial disparities. The discourse underscores the imperative of engaging local populations and prioritizing geographic regions confronting acute socio-economic, environmental, and racial challenges. The conversation advocates for a holistic shift in investing, prioritizing areas most in need while harnessing the power of race-conscious considerations to engender a more equitable global investment landscape.

engaged in tertiary and quaternary sector occupations especially in educational services, and health care and social assistance. Nonetheless, there is a small fraction of them (0.6%) who are engaged in primary economic activities, i.e., in agriculture, forestry, fishing and hunting, and mining. Whereas a lot of research has focused on these immigrants' tertiary and quaternary occupations, very little work has been done on their involvement in the primary sector especially in farming. In this paper, I use various secondary sources to explore these immigrants' agricultural engagements, including those who do it commercially (part-time and full-time) or as a hobby.

Rethinking the African Immigrant Experience in North America

Thomas Owusu
William Paterson University

The experiences of African immigrants in North America has been the subject of considerable research in recent effort in recent decades. A review of the literature on this subject, however, clearly indicate the need for a rethinking and reframing of this experience. Based on information derived from a variety of sources, including census data, questionnaire surveys, content analysis, and participant observation this paper explores the experiences of Ghanaian immigrants in the United States and Canada. The preliminary findings show that the concept of transnationalism provides an appropriate analytical framework for explaining and understanding the dynamics and complexities of their experiences, which is characterized by the changing mode of social and cultural organization, homeownership trends, economic interests and activities, entrepreneurship, retirement planning, and return migration decisions.

Resilience Planning with Participatory Mapping in Hopewell, VA

Jesse Palma and Nicole Hutton*
Old Dominion University

By fostering relationships and providing technical assistance, universities can bolster community capacity. This study utilizes the Resilience Adaptation Feasibility Tool (RAFT), a collaborative, community-driven process, to integrate university and community resources for holistic resilience planning. A policy analysis, workshop, and series of focus groups are being conducted with community members over eighteen months to assess and improve resilience to climate influenced hazards and the social determinants of health that influence adaptive capacity. The RAFT is being conducted in the City of Hopewell, Virginia from 2023 to 2024. Residents identified food security and multi-modal transportation as resilience priorities and called for participatory mapping to fill gaps in aggregated data sets by identifying neighborhood level resources in two under-resourced wards. This data supports the locality's comprehensive planning process and community organizing efforts to sustain resilience efforts long-term. It also shows the role of universities in addressing resilience in overburdened communities.

Remembering Mary's, Naturally

Trushna Parekh
Texas Southern University

This paper examines Mary's, Naturally, an historic gay bar in Houston, Texas which operated from the early 1970s through 2009. Located on Westheimer Street in the gentrified Montrose district, the building previously occupied by Mary's is now the site of a coffee shop. Mary's is not only significant in the lives of LGBTQ+ Houstonians, but also a place where countless memorial services were held during the AIDS crisis, and the ashes of numerous individuals are said to have been spread or buried on site. The bar served as a grounding place for community building and political activism. Although Mary's has been closed for years, community remembrances continue to foreground the importance of this cherished place. This paper examines how 'communities of memory' continue the work of remembrance of this space in the face of the material erasures of gentrification.

Many Latino/Hispanic people work in highly polluting industries and live in manufactured housing. However, little is known about how they are exposed to air pollution in various indoor/outdoor microenvironments during daily activities. This study uses a GPS-enabled, portable air monitor (GeoAir2) to increase their awareness of indoor/outdoor air quality and foster behavioral
